HOMING INSTINCT OF HORSES. They Find Their Way Back to Camp by

Some Mysterious Sense. Horses and mules are known by all who have had much experience with them as famous pathfinders, although I am at any time ready to match my ability with that of any other student of woodcraft who is no more familiar with the country than I. A good story of this power in the horse tribe is told of a mule by John T. Campbell of Rockville, Ind. In the early days of prospecting in Oregon a party was in the field, and bad covered a very circuitous course, which they depended on a civil engineer to enable them to retrace, should they see any objects worthy of a revisit. Having decided to return to the home camp by the most direct route, the engineer, after calculating latitudes and departures, pointed out what he believed to be the correct direction along which they must proceed to reach the desired point. When night overtook them, they found that they were not at the home camp, as they had expected to be, though the engineer assured them that they were not far away from the desired point, although he was quite unable to say in which direction it was best to turn. At this stage of the wanderings the driver of the team turned one of his mules loose, and at once, much to the discomfiture of the en-

Now, this mule had never before been allowed to wander in this locality, for fear that it would stray and become lost; nor had it ever before been over the route by which they had reached the point where the engineer was at fault. It was after dark; there was no one at the camp to make any noise that its sharp ears might detect, and the way was entirely unknown to it. How had it at once taken the route that would lead to camp?

A case allied to this happened to me in the Blue mountains of Jamaica, where a pony that had never before been in the parish, where I was lost in a tropical storm, took me back to the point from which wa had started in the morning, and that by a much nearer route, entire-1. new to both of us. While I was aware by the growth of the trees that we were headed in the right g neral direction, it was at any time impossible for me to see more than 100 yards ahead. At the time that I left the main trail and got on what afterward proved to be a much shorter cut, it was impossible for me to see anything in the blinding fury of the cloudburst. How the pony found its way with so much satisfaction to itself-it never for one instant appeared to falter on its course—I was unable to determine.
